Cottolene Is Not a Substitute for Anything

No animal product, such as hog lard, ever has afforded, or ever can afford a satisfaction to compare with Cottolene. It is far superior to lard because it contains no hog fat, and its purity is unquestioned. It is more economical than butter for shortening and frying because, being richer, one-third less is required.

Cottolene is made from cottonseed oil, a fluid extracted from the seed of purest cotton. From Cottonfield to Kitchen—human hands never touch the oil from which Cottolene is made.

Pies, doughnuts and cakes cooked with Cottolene can be fearlessly enjoyed by the most determined dyspeptic, for Cottolene makes food digestible as well as palatable.

There is no substitute for Cottolene, because there is no shortening as good as Cottolene. It is pure, clean, neutral in taste and flavor, and absolutely the purest and most healthful frying and shortening medium.

COTTOLENE is Guaranteed Your grocer is hereby authorized to refund your money in case you are not pleased, after having given Cottolene a fair test.

Never Sold in Bulk Cottolene is packed in pails with an air-tight top to keep it clean, fresh and wholesome, and prevent it from catching dust and absorbing disagreeable odors, such as fish, oil, etc.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

Howard Jeffries, banker's son, under the evil influence of Robert Underwood, fellow-student at Yale, leads a life of dissipation, marries the daughter of a gambler who died in prison, and is disowned by his father. Forced to leave college, he tried to get work and fails. His wife, Annie, is straight as a die, and has a heart of gold. A former college chum makes a business proposition to Howard which requires $2,000 cash, and Howard is broke. Robert Underwood, who made love to Annie in his college days and was repulsed, and was once engaged to Howard's stepmother, Alicia, is a welcome visitor at the Jeffries home. Underwood has apartments in the Astoria, an exclusive apartment house. Howard recalls a $250 loan to Underwood that remains unpaid and decides to ask him for the $2,000 he needs. Mrs. Jeffries, Sr., prepares for a great reception at her home. Mrs. Jeffries, foolishly encourages a dangerous intimacy with Underwood which the latter takes advantage of until he becomes a sort of social highwayman. Discovering his true character, Mrs. Jeffries denies him the house. At her reception she discusses police injustice with a lawyer guest.

"It is outrageous," said Mr. Jeffries. "No one can approve such methods. Of course, in dealing with the criminal population of a great city, they cannot wear kid gloves, but Capt. Clinton certainly goes too far. What is the specific complaint on which the suit is based?"

"Capt. Clinton," replied the judge, "made the mistake of persecuting a young woman who happened to be the daughter of a wealthy client of mine. One of his detectives arrested her on a charge of shoplifting. The girl, mind you, is of excellent family and irreproachable character. My client and his lawyer tried to show Capt. Clinton that he had made a serious blunder, but he brazened it out, claiming on the stand that the girl was an old offender. Of course, he was forced at last to admit his mistake and the girl went free, but think of the humiliation and mental anguish she underwent! It was simply a repetition of his old tactics. A conviction, no matter at what cost.

"What do you hope to bring about by this suit?"

"Arouse public indignation, and if possible get Capt. Clinton dismissed from the force. His record is none too savory. Charges of graft have been made against him time and time again, but so far nothing has been proved. To-day he is a man of wealth on a comparatively small salary. Do you suppose his money could have come to him honestly?"

In another corner of the salon stood Dr. Bernstein, the celebrated psychologist, the center of an excited crowd of enthusiastic admirers.

Alicia approached a group of chattering women. Each was more elaborately dressed than her neighbor, and loaded down with rare gems. They at once stopped talking as their hostess came up.

"It was so good of you to come!" said Alicia effusively to a fat woman with impossible blonde hair and a rouged face. "I want to introduce Dr. Bernstein to you."

"Oh, I shall be delighted," smiled the blonde. Gushingly she added: "How perfectly exquisite you look to-night, my dear."

"Do you think so?" said Alicia, pleased at the clumsy flattery.

"Your dress is stunning and your tiara simply gorgeous," raved another.

"Your musicales are always so delightful," exclaimed a third.

At that moment Mr. Jeffries caught his wife by the arm and drew her attention to some newcomers. With a laugh she left the group and hurried toward the door. Directly she was out of earshot, the three women began whispering:

"Isn't she terribly overdressed?" exclaimed the blonde. "The cheek of such a parvenue to wear that tiara."

"Her face is all made up, too," said another.

"These affairs of hers are awfully stupid, don't you think so?" piped the third.

"Yes, they bore everybody to death," said the blonde. "She's ambitious and likes to think she is a social leader. I only come here because it amuses me to see what a fool she makes of herself. Fancy a woman of her age marrying a man old enough to be her father. By the by, I don't see her beau here to-night."

"You mean that scamp, Robert Underwood?"

"Isn't it perfectly scandalous, the way he dances after her? I'm surprised Mr. Jeffries allows him to come to the house."

"Maybe there's been a row. Perhaps that explains why he's not here to-night. It's the first time I've known him absent from one of her musicales."

"He's conspicuous by his absence. Do you know what I heard the other day? I was told that Underwood had again been caught cheating at cards and summarily expelled from the club—kicked out, so to speak."

"I'm not at all surprised. I always had my doubts about him. He induced a friend of mine to buy a picture, and got a tremendous price for it on the false representation that it was a genuine Corot. My friend found out afterward that he had been duped. Proceedings were threatened, but Underwood managed to hush the affair by returning part of the money."

In another part of the room a couple were discussing Mr. Jeffries as he stood talking with Judge Brewster.

"Did you notice how Mr. Jeffries has aged recently? He no longer seems the same man."

"No wonder, after all the trouble he's had. Of course you know what a disappointment his son turned out?"

"A scamp, I understand. Married a chorus girl and all that sort of thing."

"Not exactly, but almost as bad. The girl was a waitress or something like that in a restaurant. She's very common; her father died in prison. You can imagine the blow to old Jeffries. He turned the boy adrift and left him to shift for himself."

skin gloves and saunter over to the Auditorium hotel.

"In these days if a young man from somewhere out in the corn belt came to the office and applied for a job he was asked if he had attended a first-class western college. If he replied 'yes' and could produce a letter from the professor of English showing that he had written articles for the college paper, he was put into the editorial department at $15 a week. If he could prove absolutely that he had not attended any college, he was assigned to the business department at $40 a week.

The People's Idea.
"Everybody wants to help the editor. Not as regards cheaper wood pulp or keeping down the payroll, but with suggestions for filling up the paper. Most people still believe that every newspaper man must hustle every night to get enough copy to separate the advertisements.

"In the first place the city newspaper of today as compared with the Indiana newspaper of the '70s is tame, invertebrate, colorless and apologetic. The first newspaper with which I was associated came out every Thursday from a room over a hardware store. 'The fires of evil war were still smoldering, Indiana's chief occupation was politics, nearly every man was voting as he shot, and some of them a good deal oftener. Our office equipment consisted of a Washington hand press, a footpower job press, a perennial towel and a few fonts of type—most italics. Ah, but we had an editor.

Journalism's Palmy Days.
"These were the palmy days of journalism of which we hear so much at present. No taint of commercialism, no subservience to the counting room (because there was not any counting room), no cog wheels or card indexes—simply a majestic figurehead of an editor who was animated by high and patriotic resolve to promote manslaughter as often as possible. When he opened up on a man, the man's only escape was to walk outside of our circulation, which he could do in about 10 minutes.

"If you hear a man raving about the golden age of American journalism, when each editor exercised an individual influence and led the way through darkness with a flaming torch above his head—let it go at that. Don't take the trouble to examine the files of that wonderful period or you may be discouraged over your present efforts. I plead for a return of those days when every editorial was a trumpet blast and every paragraph was a fire cracker. We used to go to press at 2 o'clock, and by 4 o'clock the whole population would be out on the streets waiting for the sounds of assault and battery.

Some 'Kind Language.
"The old time editor, the one we all read about, who stamped his individuality on every issue of his paper and did not bother about the press work, do you remember what he called a man if he did not care much for him? He did not call him a molly-coddle or an insubordinate or a malfactor or an undesirable citizen. He said that the man was a 'poitroon, a liar, a pusillanimous liar, an unmitigated horse thief, a jackal, a marplot, a cat-tiff, a reptile, a viper, a cur and a whelp.'

"Here are a lot of valuable and expressive words that are gradually being eliminated from our vernacular of today, steeped in commercialism, we have abandoned the methods of Willard F. Storey and accepted the leadership of Edward W. Bok.

The Big Advertiser.
"Also the newspapers of today are criticized because they are kind to the big advertiser. I think newspapers are somewhat under the domination of the big advertiser. In fact the big advertiser has got them so worked up
